TRICK OR TREAT!

Popular New Phrase Forebodes Halloween's Arrival

Trick or treat! Trick or treat! Indeed, if you've been anywhere near Buena Vista Street this fall, then you've positively heard the latest craze among the local youth. With frighteningly, fun new holiday, Halloween on the horizon, young ghosts and goblins from Carthay Circle to Elysian Arcade are employing bona fide shake-down methods to extract your delectable delights. So stock up, fellow citizens, unless you enjoy a swell window soaping, that is.

Speaking of stocking up, local confectionery Trolley Treats is busy as bees creating their new seasonal offerings that are so sweet, it's scary. Shared shop owner and train aficionado Woody Hoffenberger declares, "We've pulled out all the stops this year. Classics like the Mickey Pumpkin Apple and the Pumpkin Seed Brittle will need to slide over and make some room for our festive newcomers, including Ghost Mickey Marshmallows, Pumpkin Fudge, and Halloween Cake Pops to name a few. Just be sure to get 'em before the ghouls come a collecting."

And a collecting they will do, by the bucket and bagful. Fortunately, neighborhood staple Atwater

Ink & Paint has concocted just the buckets for the cause. Their new pumpkin and ghost buckets not only house a proud loot, but also howl at the moon with swanky, seasonal style. Revealed owner and part-time art instructor Ronald Pound, "Never did I think when I opened an art supply store that an event like Halloween would emerge to drive the local marketplace. But it's such a creative, colorful holiday, somehow it just works for us."

Of course, leave it to Elias & Company if you're really looking for that swanky, seasonal style. Their exclusive Villains line is just what the evil doctor ordered to make you the poison apple of everyone in town's eye. Explained long-time owner Elias Walter Parr, "Haunting headwear, sinister shirts, and petrifying plush not only say I celebrate the season, but also give you that hipster 'je ne sais quoi' our customers have come to expect in recent years."

So, indeed, whether it's a trick or a treat you seek this season, burgeoning Buena Vista Street is there to summon the spooks and help you celebrate in fine fashion! Happy Halloween, fellow citizens!

"I" on Food with Inglebert Irving Golden Vine Winery: Harvest Season

Once an autumnal palate and forever a fall baby, I have a special connection to this time of year. And when the heat of summer fades and the days become short, I am always reminded of the grape harvests of my youth. Indeed, they were dream-like experiences, ones in which even I, a notorious hermit and curmudgeon, succumbed to the hearty food and festive environment to blossom into a social butterfly. And while I have longed to duplicate those times, I have recently grown to doubt that I ever would again. So when informed that the Golden Vine Winery was ripe with harvest fare, dubious as I was, I had to give it one more shot.

Entering the quixotic, candlelit piazzas of the winery, I elected to begin my tour at the Sonoma Terrace. Surprised by their selection of vintage wines, I chose a full-bodied cabernet sauvignon, which I partnered with a cheese plate. Inexplicably, the combination of the smooth, creamy cambozola with the rich, oaky cab melted my sardonic taste buds away, and I was transported to another time and place. I was once again that young, vigorous man on my grandpapa's vineyard, mingling with family, getting lost in the music, and really, genuinely enjoying food again.

Inspired, I strolled over to Wine Country Trattoria for a late dinner.

Inglebert also recommends:

- Anti-Vampire Chicken Flatbread with roasted garlic sauce, marinated chicken, smoked gouda, mozzarella, roasted red peppers, harissa tomato drizzle and garnished with scallions at Boardwalk Pizza & Pasta.
- The popular Fire Cracker Duck Wings with Soy, Lime, and Sriracha Chili Sauce at Carthay Circle Restaurant.
- The new Chorizo and Eggs Breakfast Cone at Cozy Cone Motel.
- Flo's VB Café slow roasted Pork Loin with Coca-Cola barbecue sauce and house-made pies (check out our seasonal pumpkin pie-o-rama).
- Holiday shaped sourdough bread hand-crafted and baked daily offered at Boudin's Bread Cart & Mortimer's Market.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

The boys and I just adore this easy breezy time of year on Buena Vista Street. Everything is so toot, plunk, and boom, and it positively reminds us of our roots in the Windy City. We just wanted to give a shout out and wish all our fans the happiest of Halloweens! And, of course, invite everyone out to Carthay Circle for some smooth sounds. We'll be pulling up in the ol' jalopy as usual.

Lovingly,
Five & Dime

Dear Editor,

All this recent chatter about holidays and costumes has me in a bit of a quelle horreur. I, for one, wear a costume every day and believe everyone should do the same. What you wear is a reflection of who you are, and at the moment, I am reflecting a scarf from Florence, shoes from Micronesia, and a large, festive chapeau from San Francisco. Secretly, I am hoping that all of these trick-or-treaters will keep their costumes on long after the holiday has passed and well into the new year.

Sincerely,
Phiphi Francis

Dear Editor,

Just a friendly neighborhood reminder for everyone out there to be on their best behavior this Halloween season. I'll be keeping a close eye on the situation as usual and will be issuing plenty of good behavior citations. In case you're wondering, I'll be the one dressed as the police officer.

Officially,
Calvin the Cop

The three-course, prix fixe World of Color menu whetted my appetite, and I selected the arugula salad with spiced walnuts, goat cheese, and a fig-balsamic dressing as my first course. Following it up with the wildly creative potato gnocchi with crab and vegetables in a citrus cream sauce, I was further propelled into my flight of harvest fancy. In truth, I would have kicked off the loafers and stomped grapes had anyone on the staff asked me. And after topping it all off with a succulent European-style dessert sampling platter, it was time for the real party to begin.

See, by ordering off the World of Color menu, I was provided access to the reserved viewing area for the nighttime spectacular. And, as always, the show delivered! The lights! The water! The music! My heart soared with emotion, and my evening was truly complete. And as I looked at myself in the mirror later that night, I noticed a bit of the party, grey façade had vanished, replaced by my long lost autumnal palate again. And I was happy to see my old friend.

Needless to say, I give the Golden Vine Winery my highest recommendation and suggest a visit before harvest season ends. Priority seating is recommended, and World of Color dining packages are naturally available as well. Call 714-781-DINE
